

Who benefits from inclusion?

Personal skill development.

Increased job satisfaction.

Higher confidence & preparedness.

Improved teacher-student relationships.

Inclusive attitudes.

More confident to work or study.

School community connectedness.

Teachers & leaders...

Families...

Career benefits.

Friendships & social skills.

Improved teacher-student relationships.

Inclusive values.

Positive learning experiences.

...and all students!

Inclusive schools are places where all students and their families feel safe and a part of the school community.

Inclusive education benefits teachers, leaders, families, and all students.

Department of Education

How does inclusion benefit all teachers and leaders?

Improved teacher-student relationships, including mutual respect.

Increased job satisfaction due to positive student engagement.

Broadening perspectives, & more innovative & reflective practices, leading to higher confidence and preparedness.

Personal skill development (eg. problem solving), leading to positive social and working relationships.

Inclusive schools are places where all students and their families feel safe and a part of the school community.

Inclusive education benefits teachers, leaders, families, and all students.

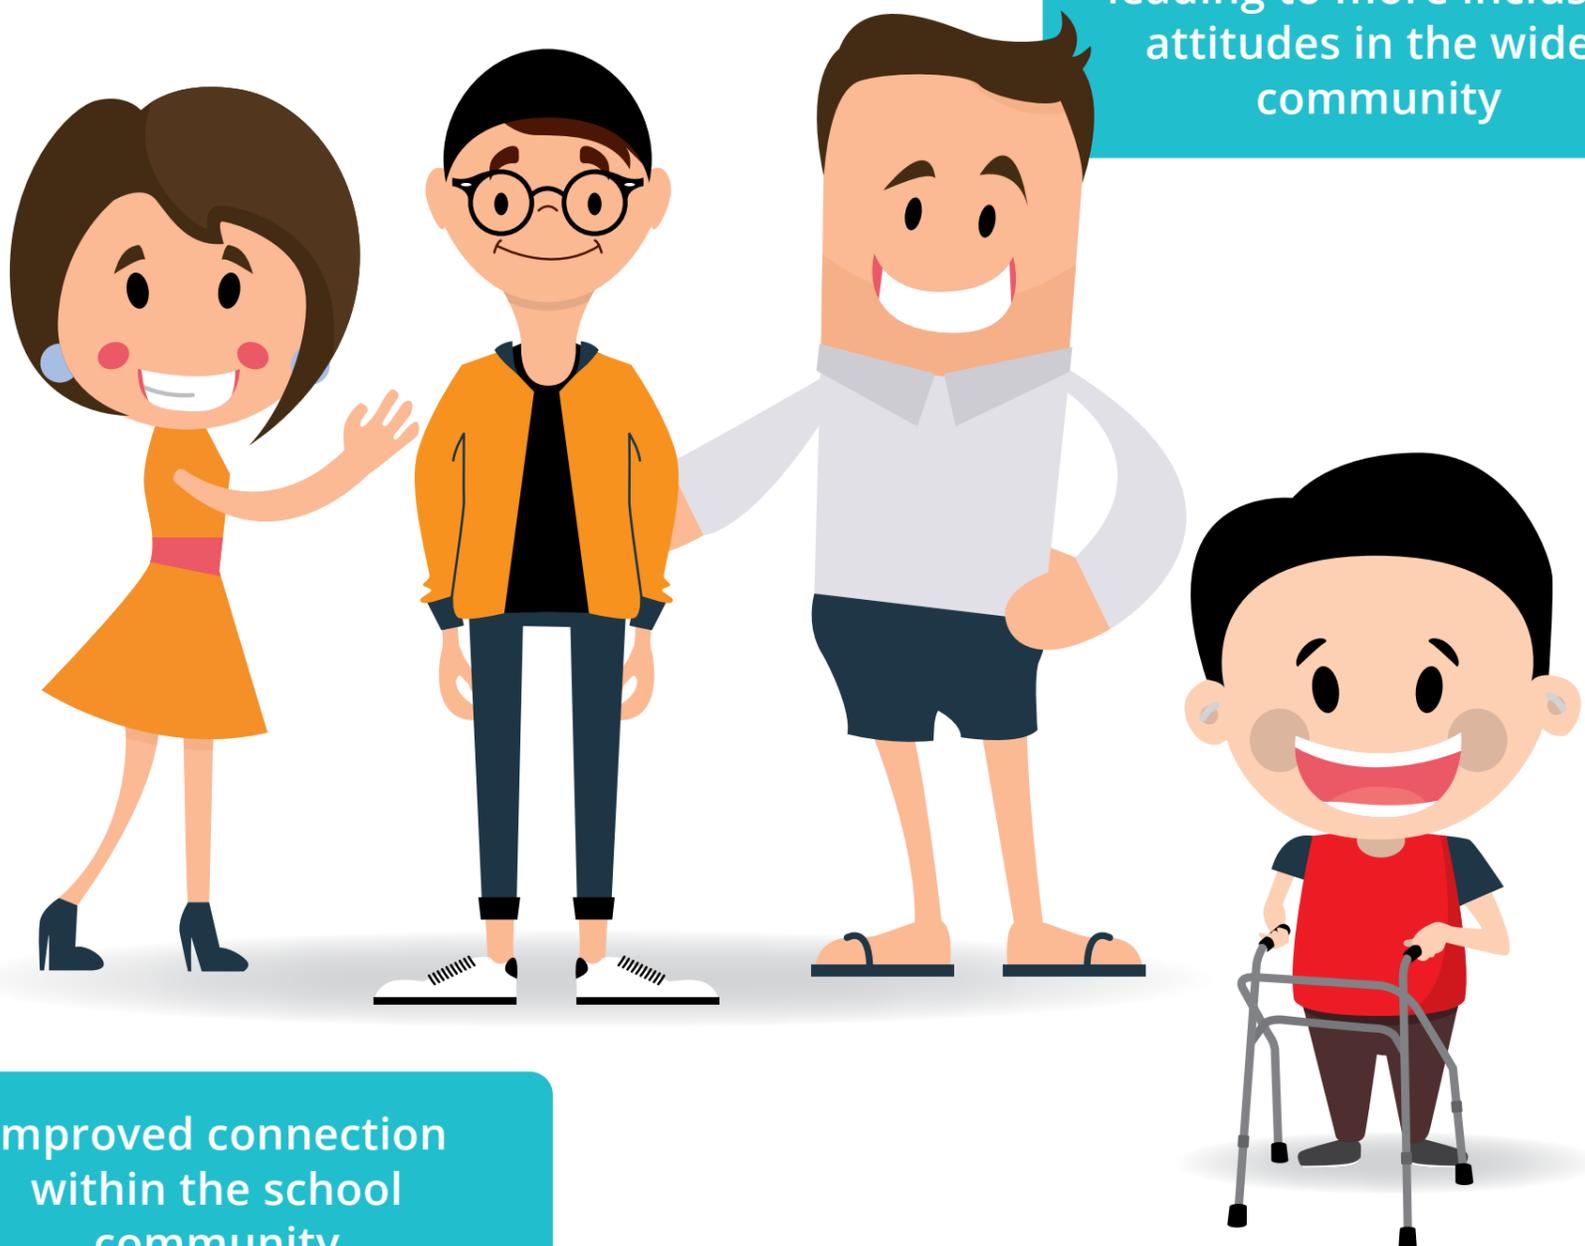

Department of Education

How does inclusion benefit all families?

All families feel more confident they can commit to work or study

Improved awareness and understanding of disability leading to more inclusive attitudes in the wider community

Improved connection within the school community

Inclusive schools are places where all students and their families feel safe and a part of the school community.

Inclusive education benefits teachers, leaders, families, and all students.

Department of Education

How does inclusion benefit all students?

Increased cooperation, social skills, and friendship opportunities.

Career benefits after completing school.

Positive values and attitudes towards diversity.

Positive learning environments and relationships with teachers.

Learning that caters to their strengths and abilities.

Greater community involvement.

Inclusive schools are places where all students and their families feel safe and a part of the school community.

Inclusive education benefits teachers, leaders, families, and all students.

